Who we are
Directing Change is a nonprofit organization devoted to training and amplifying the voices of young people in support of mental health awareness, suicide prevention and other critical health and social justice issues.

What we do
The organization takes a youth-centered approach to equip young people with the facts, skills, confidence and supports they need to cope with tough times; provides curriculums and trainings to educators and school administrators to impact school climates, policies and practices; facilitates parent workshops; and offers crisis support to schools after a student suicide.

How we do it
Our programs and initiatives prepare young people ages 12-25 to recognize signs of distress and how to seek help for themselves or a friend through the process of following submission guidelines for a film and art contest; asking youth to create their own unique message about suicide prevention and mental health for their peers. As a result of the program, young people create short PSAs "by youth, for youth" that apply effective messaging and are used to raise awareness as part of media campaigns and outreach.

"By involving a single classroom or after-school club, Directing Change has the potential to reduce stigma, open the conversation about suicide, foster youth leadership (including that of marginalized youth), stimulate school-wide interest in suicide prevention programming, and be a catalyst for school-wide change.” – NYU

Why partner with us?

Our organization has dedicated over a decade to building partnerships with young people, educators and community organizations.

We are committed to deepening community ties, and strengthening existing relationships with public and private organizations, foundations, districts, schools, county offices of education, behavioral health agencies, community organizations, arts groups and more. Our model makes partnering an easy option because we have so many kinds of access points to our organization. Donations, grants, and event sponsorships support the staff, and keep the lights on, the schools and organizations implementing our program sustain our growth, and our volunteer judges – giving the gift of their time – provide transparency to our contest process. At the center of it all, youth offer their creativity and stories to make a difference in their communities.

Since its launch during the 2011-12 school year, more than 15,000 youth have received mental health awareness and suicide prevention training through participation in the program and have applied what they learned to the more than 6,000 films and 1000 pieces of original art they created.

FY 2021/22 Outcomes
Why we do it

Every year we receive a number of personal notes from teachers that share their appreciation for the program and the impact it had on the young people they work with. These notes mean the world to us and we are happy to share this note we received in 2022.

“This year we really needed to get into some of these topics because it’s been an emotionally brutal year for so many students. One thing that has already happened was one of my students came to me after being concerned about seeing the signs of suicidal thinking of one of her best friends. She took the right steps, went outside of her comfort zone and got her friend help. It was one of those rare moments where we see a direct relationship between what we are talking about and the students applying it right in front of us.

Thank you Directing Change.”

These kinds of notes let us know that our reason for doing this work is paying off. Plain and simple we want to prepare youth, schools and communities to create live saving change. Our model makes partnering an easy option because we have so many kinds of access points to our organization. Donations, grants, and event sponsorships support the staff, and keep the lights on, the schools and organizations implementing our program sustain our growth, and our volunteer judges – giving the gift of their time – provide transparency to our contest process. More than 15,000 youth from more than 500 school districts around California have created over 7,000 film and art projects that have been watched over 500,000 times on our website and social media platforms.

“I want to reach out and share with you that your video presentation in our English classes saved a life today. A student had a plan and was ready to act on that plan. He shared that he previously tried over spring break, but his little brother unknowingly interrupted him. He saw the video in class yesterday and learned about the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline. He said that he did not know about that resource prior to the presentations. He was really struggling this morning and he called the Lifeline. They were able to encourage him to go to school and talk to someone which he did. After a risk assessment and determining he had a plan and a means, I transported him to our behavioral health Crisis center and did a warm handoff.

With over 200 teachers involved in our program, they overwhelmingly report seeing the impact on students such as gaining skills for dealing with mental health issues later in life, noticing social isolation, increased sense of safety and sensitivity to the feelings of others, and knowledge of how to connect peers with resources.
